THE GAMING HOUSE, OR,

A THRILLING ADVENTURE.

It was in the spring of 18-, that found myself gliding upon the waters of the Mississippi, and bound for the Crescent City, New Orleans.

With a single exception, I found no traveling acquaintances on board the boat, although I had been two days upon my journey, which was becoming quite monotonous. The individual with whom I singularly enough fraternized, seemed. like myself, to have little inclination to extend his acquaintance among the passengers, though he continually seemed to be on the look-out for some one, and from the operations of two or three individuals whose profuse display of vest chains and jewelry, and proficiency at cards at the table in the saloon betrayed their professpolice detective in disguise.

He called himself George Thorn, Kentucky; so his card read, which he gave me in exchange for mine. In truth not sell it.' he was a noble specimen of that State .-Full six feet in hight; a clear, intelligent blue eve, broad forehead, and light, curly hair, muscular arm, and the chest of a Hercules, he challenged the admiration of more than one of the passengers, as with his serious and never-smiling face he paced the promenade deck or sat apparently buried in deep thought in the saloun. Do you ever play cards?' said I to him as he left a group that were standing about a table of four players, and noting the progress of the game. I had frequently seen him invited, but he invariably, like myself, refused to participate in the game.

Oh, ves,' said he; 'but where is the use of playing here? Those fellows (nodding toward the players) know every card in the pack by their backs, and they are trying hard to pluck some poor pigeon from among the passengers, but as yet with indifferent success; beware of them,

I thanked him for his friendly warning, and at the same time expressed my astonishment at his affirmation. To convince me of it, he called the steward of the boat, and ordered him to bring him a fresh pack of cards; were brought, and he handed the pack to me, bidding me to shuffle them. I did so, when he immedistely selected every ace and king from the pack, without looking at the face of them. Next, he dealt them in two parcels, when, upon examination, I found that all the cards of teal value in the game were in his hand, although I could not detect the least unfairness as he dealt

'You see,' said he smiling at my look of astonishment, 'the advantage an expert in these matters has over even a skillful

I do, indeed,' I replied, astonished at my fellow traveler's dexterity, and beginning to think he might be a reformed gambler, or one playing the possum' for some purpose or other; but as he did not nige or even invite me to play, nor had played with any one else, and threw the cards aside with an expression of disgust too natural to be assumed, I came to the conclusion that my traveling acquaintance was a riddle yet to be solved.

Early the next morning the boat arrived at New Orleans, and amid the hurry and bustle of disembarkation, I lost my friend, the Kentuckian, not even seeing him to bid him adieu. The same evening, however, after visiting the theatre, I was enjoying the cool air and the fragrance of a Havana in the rotunda of the St. Charles opponent, raked the money. As the player, who was sitting with his back partially towards us, mentioned Kertucky in his conversation, I saw Thorn listen with eagerness, and as he twisted the ring he offered to bet upon his finger, I saw the Kentuckian turn deadly pale .-His eyes glowed like fire for an instant, then his countenance assumed his usual calm and placid look, and, to our amazement, he rese and walked across the apartment to the player, who had just been left by his companion, and courteously proposed to try a hand with him, if agreesble, and if we, his friends, would excuse him for a short time. Of course we assented-so did the gambler, who appeared at first somewhat surprised at the proposition, but probably resolved to try his

A "Most Proper" Preamble.

The Kentucky House of Representaives had under consideration, a day or two since, resolutions endorsing the Lecompton scheme. The Democracy not posed the following sugar-coating preamble-the exact effect of which, on the

Whereas, the newspapers inform us that the Lecompton Constitution, at the noblest empire in the world, for what you election on the 21st of December, 1857, received over six thousand votes in its favor, of which over three thousand were furnished by those gallant little precincts. Oxford, Kickapoo and Shawnee; and we are informed from the same source that at the election on the 4th of January, 1858, upwards of ten thousand vile and traitorous Abolitionist (see President Buchanan's message) has the insolent assurance to cast their votes against said Constitution, thereby cenclusively proving that the majority of the people of Kansas are wholly untit for self-government, and should have that Constitution crammed down their traitorous throats, and if they do not swallow it with a good grace, and without a single wry face, we should smash this Union into ten thousand fragments; and whereas it also appears from the same source of information that although those Abolitionists, traitors, &c., cast more votes for their candidates for State and Legislative officers, than were cast by the men of 'law and order," even counting in full the magnificent returns from Oxford, Kickapoo and Shawnee, yet we have too much confidence in the parriotic boldness of the President of the Lecompton convention to doubt one moment that he will refuse the traitors their certificates of election, and give certificates to the lawabiding and orderly candidates upon our side of the question, whereby two United States Senators are secured, together with all future judges of election and other officers having control of the ballot-box, through whom the few but gallant spirits of Oxford, Shawnee and Kickapoo, like the three hundred Sparians at Thermopyles, will roll back the countless horde of Abolition barbarians "as long as the grass shall grow or waters flow,' (see Coke Littleton) which the strong arm of the United States army, in aid of the civil government of Kansas, as in the case of the
